General Comments

1. Where possible, link to child pages from their parent pages. Child pages should not only be accessible from the main navigation.

2. Organize all blog posts into a central place (under a main navigation item). This page should highlight the latest articles and allow users to easily filter posts by category. See wireframe #8 for an example.

3. Make better use of fonts (Possibly from fonts.google.com or typekit.com) and text colors (body text is hard to read).

4. Right hand sidebar -- Should be removed to accommodate a better layout for the main content. Donation link can be featured in header and home page. 'Current Voyage' can be folded into the Hōkūleʻa main nav item.

5. Footer -- Should reincorporate elements of the main navigation (text-only navigation, search, and social links)

6. Remove the 'Posted On' date and other aspects of the layout that show that you're displaying blog posts (unless the content is an article and should be conveyed as a blog post). Content pages that aren't actually articles should be Wordpress 'Pages' and not 'Posts'.

7. There are lots of links to off-site resources treated like they are within the site. Suggest removing off-site links from navigation and ensuring it is clear that links in body copy go to another site.

8. The KCC site should be treated more as a knowledge base/encyclopedia that is separate from the Hokulea site (i.e. links should not be so seamlessly integrated throughout the Hokulea site). Could conceivably put all content from KCC site in a Wiki (after the initial phase)?

9. Make better use of blog categories to organize posts into more useful buckets (that can potentially be pulled into content pages in a more relevant way).

10. The navigation and footer should be reorganized and uncentered. See wireframes #1 and #2 for suggested layouts.

11. The Previous Voyages sections under Hōkūleʻa should list each voyage in a consistent manner (e.g. introduction, crew list, route map).

1. This slider can serve as a call-to-action to various parts of the site. Text and links can be placed on each slide rather than it just being an image gallery. This would be a good way to direct different audiences (e.g. teachers/students/volunteers) to relevant parts of the site)

2. This area should include a quick summary of WWV and/or a mission statement.

3. This post list is very overwhelming. Suggest limiting it to 3/4 of the latest posts followed by a link to the blog page.

4. Remove the sidebar

5. Add a "Get Involved" call-to-action

3. See Wireframe #3 for a suggested layout for this page.

Vision & Mission

Home > Who We Are > Vision & Mission

1. Who we are main navigation item links directly to this page. Suggest creating a general 'Who we are' landing page with general information about the organization, and without extended information on the Hokulea.

2. Remove 'Posted On' date. It shouldn't be clear that this page is a blog post (in fact, this should be a Wordpress 'Page', not a 'Post'.

3. Text is difficult to read. Better use of fonts and a darker color would help. Consider also making all text left-justified.

1. Page should be moved to the What We Do section (which should be relabeled Hōkūleʻa)

2. Images take up too much horizontal space. Text should be in a column next to image or flow around it.

3. If possible, it should be clear that links go to external sites (an icon before the link?). Or else, hyperlinks within content should be minimized (can be added to the bottom external link section)

4. This section should be more of a call-to-action to jump off to the KCC site. Something like "Learn More at Hawaiian Voyaging Traditions"

Moʻolelo: Our Story

http://hokulea.org/moolelo/
Home > Who We Are > Our Story

1. The content of this page is primarily about the Hōkūleʻa and should be put in the Hōkūleʻa section (AKA 'What We Do')

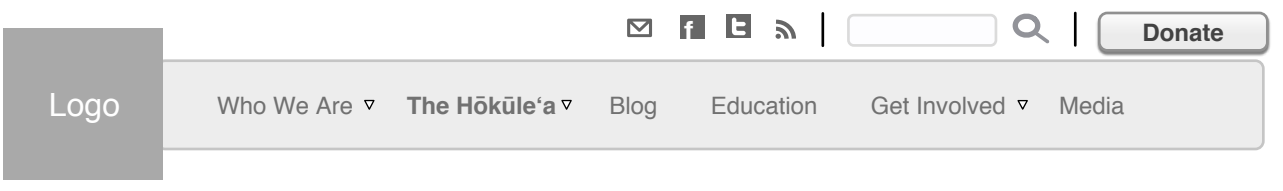
2. This page is way too long, however its a really good story. The amount of content is okay, it just needs to be presented better. Think of long form articles in places like medium.com.

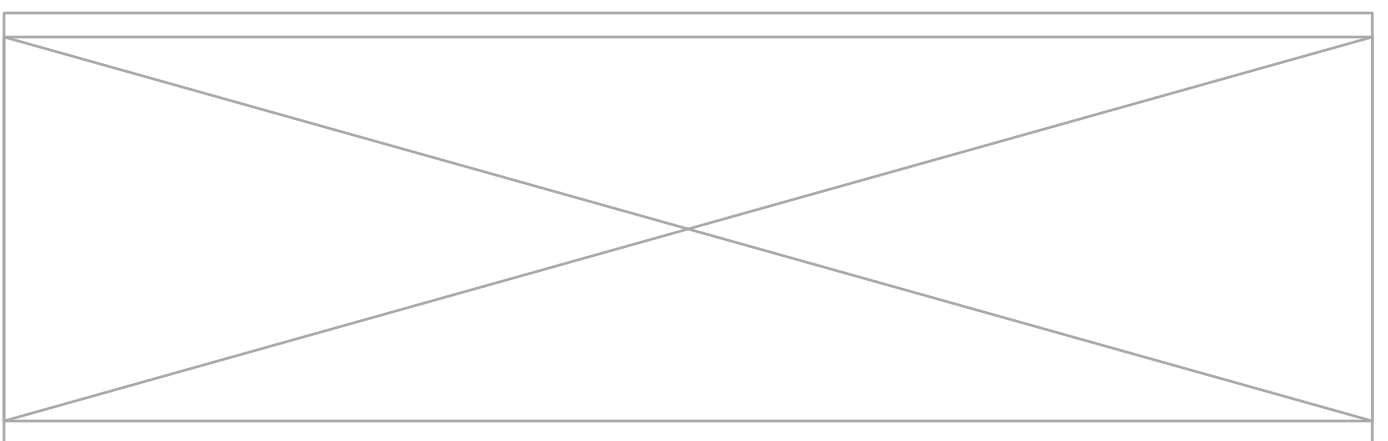
3. The intro should be more prominent and lead readers into the rest of the article.

4. Include some callouts (like an image and a quote or short bit of interesting text in a large font size). These provide short summaries of surrounding text that can be scanned more easily than having to read all the text.

5. Text should wrap around images in a longer narrative or be two columns if there is a short section or callout.

4. See Wireframe #4 for a suggested layout for this page.





Moʻolelo: Our Story

The Polynesian Voyaging Society was founded in 1973 for scientific inquiry into our history and heritage: How did the Polynesians discover and settle small islands in ten million square miles of ocean, geographically the largest "nation" on earth? How did they navigate without instruments, guiding themselves across ocean distances of 2500 miles? In 1973-1975, we built a replica of an ancient double-hulled voyaging canoe to conduct an experimental voyage from Hawaiʻi to Tahiti in order answer these questions. The canoe was designed by founder Herb Kawainui Kāne and named Hōkūleʻa, Star of Gladness.

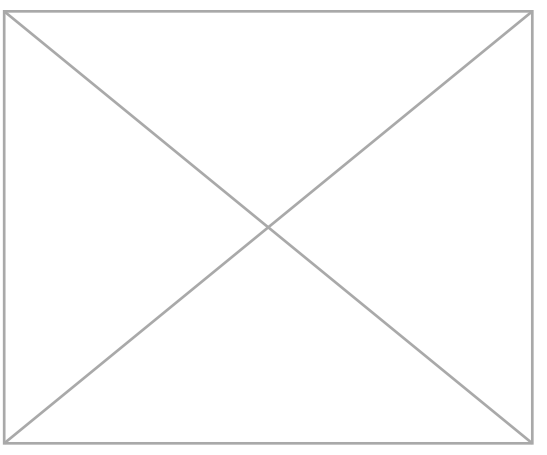
A Generation of Renewal 1975 – 2000

On March 8th, 1975, at the sacred place called Hakipuʻu-Kualoa, in Kāneʻohe Bay, Oʻahu, Hōkūleʻa was launched. The launching was one of many events that marked a generation of renewal for the Hawaiian people: renewal of pride in our language, stories, chants, dance, art, and many other expressions of traditional culture. This same era saw the end of abuse to the Island of Kaho'olawe, its return to the people of Hawai'i (1994), and the beginning of its healing.

Voyages of Rediscovery

Hōkūleʻa's first voyage to Tahiti in 1976 was a tremendous success. The Tahitians have great traditions and genealogies of ancestral canoes and navigators. What they didn't have at the time was a voyaging canoe. When Hōkūleʻa arrived at the beach in Papeʻete Harbor, over half the island's people were there, more than 17,000 strong, and there was a spontaneous affirmation of what a great heritage we shared and also a renewal of the spirit of who we are today.

"When Hōkūleʻa arrived at the beach in Papeʻete Harbor, over half the island's people were there, more than 17,000 strong, and there was a spontaneous affirmation of what a great heritage we shared"



Hōkūleʻa Arriving in Papeʻete, 1976

On that first voyage, we were facing cultural extinction. There was no navigator from our culture left. The Voyaging Society looked beyond Polynesia to find a traditional navigator to guide Hōkūleʻa: Mau Piailug, a navigator from a small island called Satawal, in Micronesia. He agreed to come to Hawaiʻi and guide Hōkūleʻa to Tahiti. Without him, our voyaging would never have taken place. Mau was the only traditional navigator who was willing and able to reach beyond his culture to ours.

A Generation of Renewal 1975 – 2000

In 1978 Hōkūleʻa set out for Tahiti again. The heavily loaded canoe capsized in stormy seas off of Molokaʻi. The next day, crew member Eddie Aikau left on a surfboard to get help. Crew member Kiki Hugho remembers, "We were hours away from losing people. Hypothermia, exposure, exhaustion. When he paddled away, I really thought he was going to make it and we weren't." But the crew was rescued; Eddie was lost at sea. After the tragedy, Nainoa Thompson recalls, "we could have quit. But Eddie had this dream about finding islands the way our ancestors did and if we quit, he wouldn't have his dream fulfilled. He was saying to me, 'Raise Hawaiki from the sea.'"

1. This section is primarily about the Hōkūleʻa and should be labeled as such. We suggest a fairly large restructuring of this section (see sitemap) to make it easy to find information about the Hōkūleʻa and its history without too much distracting noise.

2. There are quite a few redundancies with this and the Our Story Page as well as the Hōkūleʻa page under Who We Are. Suggest consolidating this with the Hōkūleʻa page and keeping it to general information about the ship itself (and keeping historical information in the Our Story page).
